Khalid Pitts

Khalid Pitts is a small business owner and current board member of the District of Columbia Healthcare Benefit Exchange Authority Executive Board.

Mr. Pitts has a long history and commitment to the quality of life in the city and its residents. His community work began in Boston, where he worked for the Harvard School of Public Health as a Site Director for one of the school's youth-based violence prevention programs. Bringing that experience with him, Mr. Pitts worked for the Beverly Coleman Miller Group, where he designed and managed programs serving youth in DC's public housing communities. He continued his work with the youth of the District as a senior researcher at the National Institutes of Health, leading a team of investigators working to reduce pregnancy rates among teenagers in communities of color. Mr. Pitts has also worked as a senior health analyst with DC's Central Detention Facility, where his primary duty was to assess the healthcare system at the DC Jail.

A Ward 2 resident, Mr. Pitts received a Bachelor of Arts degree in History from The College of the Holy Cross and a Master of Public Health from George Washington University.
