I was involved with a multidisciplinary study to evaluate and improve breast cancer therapeutics. I was focused on the discovery phase of the investigation of breast cancer oncogenes "Amplified in Breast" AIB-1 and AIB-2, similar to the oncogenes BRCA-1 and BRCA-2. The goal of the research project was to identify the molecular mechanisms of the genes and possible uses of biologic treatments. I applied gene expression methodologies to identify proteins and their level of expression in human breast cancer cell lines. Our investigational team also used cDNA microarray technology.

Aeva Gaymon-Doomes

Aeva Gaymon-Doomes, MD is the owner and outpatient physician at her own private practice, and is a member on the clinical faculty at the George Washington University School of Medicine and the Howard University Hospital Department of Psychiatry.

Dr. Gaymon-Doomes is a board-certified physician specializing in the psychiatric care of adult women, children, and adolescents, and has been working in the fields of psychiatry and behavioral sciences for over 12 years. While maintaining a private practice in her own name, Dr. Gaymon-Doomes has served in a variety of roles relating to psychiatry and treatment of both children and adults. She has previously worked in the inpatient child unit of Sheppard Pratt Hospital, and held the role of Department Chair of Child Psychiatry at the Psychiatric Institute of Washington.

In addition to her patient-facing work, she also works as an Assistant Clinical Professor of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences at both the George Washington University and Howard University schools of Medicine. Dr. Gaymon-Doomes is a member of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry and the Child and Adolescent Psychiatry Society of Greater Washington.

In addition to clinical work, Dr. Gaymon-Doomes is a researcher and has published not only in medical journals such as the Journal of the Student National Medical Association, but has also contributed to print media for publications such as Ebony, TIME, Health Magazine, and Nike.

A Ward 4 resident, Dr. Gaymon-Doomes received a Bachelor of Arts in Women's Studies from Spelman College, and a Doctor of Medicine from Howard University College of Medicine.
