Awareness Day.

Whereas more than 110,000 individuals in the United States are on the national waiting list for organ transplants;

Whereas in 2010, 50 percent of individuals on the national waiting list for organ transplants were racial or ethnic minorities, including more than 32,000 African-Ameri-

7,000 Asians and Pacific Islanders, and nearly 1,000
American Indians and Alaska Natives;

Whereas individuals on the national waiting list for organ transplants are most likely to find well-matched organs within their own racial or ethnic group, but minority organ donors account for less than 30 percent of the available donor pool;

Whereas 26 million individuals in the United States suffer from chronic kidney disease;

Whereas more than 48,000 individuals in the United States died in 2008 from chronic kidney disease;

Whereas African-Americans represented less than 13 percent of the population in the United States in 2010, but represented nearly 30 percent of individuals in the United States requiring a kidney transplant on the national waiting list for organ transplants;

Whereas 17 individuals die each day waiting for organ transplants due to a shortage of donated organs; and

Whereas the Minority Organ and Tissue Transplant Education Program, established by the National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases and the National Center on Minority Health and Health Disparities, observes National Minority Donor Awareness Day on August 1 to increase awareness of organ donation among African-American, Hispanic, Latino, Asian, Alaskan Native, Pacific Islander, and Native American populations and to recognize minority donors and their families: Now, therefore, be it
